

1. D. Become Knowledgeable of Your District Bylaws and Policies

You will want to become familiar with your district Bylaws and Policies. Bylaws, include statements about your state law and include some opinion so, it is best to know the laws that impact your position in your state. Bylaws describe how the board operates while policies describe how the district operates. Policies are most typically written by your contracted services. Many, if not all, of these policies include State revised code and the opinions of the people inside your contracted services. You may want to ask this paid service to highlight in a different color which parts are a reflection on your state laws, and which are their opinions. Each district may have a policy manual, and it should be located online where the community can easily find it. Rely on your community to point to policies that work and do not work.
